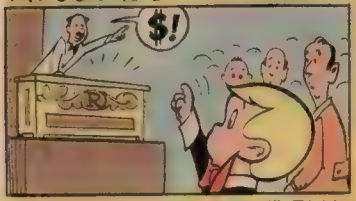
RICHIE RICH in The SECRET of the DESK



"I'll bid a hundred dollars!" Richie Rich shouted as he rushed into the auction room!

The auctioneer recognized the world's richest boy and said, "The last bid for that desk was twelve dollars!" There was an excited buzzing around the auction room as others recognized Richie. That desk must be valuable!

Bugsy Creech and Spike Rugger, whose faces were familiar to the local police, saw more to Richie's eagerness to have that desk than just its value as a piece of furniture.

Bugsy said, "It's an antique—worth a couple of thousand, I bet!"

"The bid is one hundred. Who'll make it a hundred and ten?" the auctioneer demanded, looking about eagerly. He'd paid only six dollars for it that very morning to Richie's mother, who wanted to make room for a new desk she had bought Richie. "Remember, this desk came from the home of the world's richest man!"

"Antique, my foot!" exclaimed Spike in a hoarse whisper. "There's got to be a fortune hidden in that desk. The Rich kid just remembered hiding some dough there—else why would he be so anxious to buy it back?" Bugsy nodded in agreement, while the bidding grew wild.

Everybody was convinced that the desk was either a rare antique or contained some hidden treasure. However, Richie's bid of twelve hundred dollars clinched the sale for him.

"Please deliver it to my home," Richie ordered, handing the auctioneer cash.

"Would tonight be all right?" asked the latter, adding, "I've got a truckload of stuff going out, but yours will be the first delivered.

"Richie nodded in agreement. Then, as an afterthought, he said, "I'm staying in town for dinner. There's something in the desk... well, I'd like to ride on that truck, if you don't mind!"

The two sharp-looking toughs, Bugsy and Spike, exchanged glances and whispers as they overheard Richie's request.

"There is something valuable in the desk. The kid practically said so!" one of them murmured excitedly.

"So that truck gets hijacked tonight!" said the other. Then walking up to the auctioneer, who was alone now, he asked casually, "That desk must be a real antique, eh?"

"Not at all," the auctioneer told him. "It's a good heavy mahogany desk,' his Ma told me, but it was made just last year!"

"See, the desk itself is worthless," Spike pointed out, winking to Bugsy.

As they left the big room, Bugsy remarked, "Look, Spike, if there's something valuable in that desk, why wouldn't the kid just take it out?"

CASPER, THE FRIENDLY GHOST

"First," explained Spike with a grin, "the desk wasn't his any more. Second, suppose some crooks saw him take, say a sack of jewels out of it. He might be robbed. Right?"

"You can say that again!"

Richie sat with the driver of the auctioneer's truck as it rumbled along the highway towards the Rich estate, its lights piercing the darkness ahead.

"There's something in the road ahead!" Richie remarked suddenly. And, as they drew closer, "It's a log right in our path!" Beyond, a car with its headlights off stood waiting.

The truck driver jammed on the brakes and muttered, "I think we're in for some trouble, kid. I've been hijacked before!"

Richie quickly asked, "Can I get into the back of the truck from here? I have my pocket walkie-talkie with me—always carry it to let the family know where I am!" The truck driver opened a panel just big enough for Richie to squeeze through. By the time Bugsy and Spike, wearing masks, reached the truck with drawn guns, Richie was safely in back radioing the state police for help.

The two thugs went right to the rear of the truck and opened the doors. Richie's desk was right at the end; the boy himself crouched behind some other pieces towards the front of the truck. The masked pair struggled.

"This thing must be made of lead!" Bugsy groaned. "We can hardly budge it!"

"Hey, driver, come back here and give us a hand with this desk!" ordered Spike.

They were so busy with the heavy desk that they didn't notice the approach of police cars until it was too late.

"Reach!" the officers hollered. The would-be thieves put up their hands. Then Richie came from the back of the truck.

"Thanks for getting here so promptly, officers!" he said, smiling. "They were after my desk. It has something valuable in it!" He slid a secret panel back in the desk, revealing a small safe. Twisting a dial, he opened the safe and took out a letter. "My girl Gloria is away. She wrote me a letter—kind of personal!"

Richie blushed. The thieves groaned.

"And we broke our backs on that mahogany desk!" Spike almost wept.

They flipped when Richie said: "Oh, it's just mahogany veneer... on a base of solid gold. Too heavy for my room!"
